Citizen group to begin school bond issue plan

About 60 local citizens will eat a big meal Tuesday night and then roll up their sleeves to tackle solutions to the problem of overcrowding in Canyon's schools.

Two committees, one to study the need for new schools in the district, and the other to study possible ways of funding expansion of school facilities, will have their first meetings with a kick-off dinner beginning at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday in the junior high cafeteria.

Mrs. Ruth Holladay, secondary curriculum coordinator for the district and publicity committee chairman, said a high rate of positive responses has been tallied from those invited to participate in the committee studies.

School administrators and staff members have also been assigned to committees with ex-officio status to advise the committee members on school matters.

The Committee for Quality Education was formed recently by the school board to study present enrollment levels in the city's four schools, to eye projected enrollment patterns over the next few years and to evaluate the need for expanded facilities.

The Committee for Sound Financing, also formed by the board, is to look at the district's present fiscal situation, review the status of the district's bonded indebtedness and evaluate the desirability of a bond issue to provide funding for new schools.

A third committee, a publicity committee, will also meet during the evening.

Mrs. Holladay said committee members will be served a meal at the junior high Tuesday night and then will break up into the three respective committee groupings to elect officers and to begin planning future meeting times and places and to begin studying the parameters of the problems to be studied.

Both committees were formed at the suggestion of Supt. Jerry Jacobs and Board President Tom Keeling. Mrs. Holladay said, though, that in the past it has almost been traditional for a citizens study group to examine the school district's needs when overcrowding developed.

Jacobs will preside at the brief meeting before committees begin their own deliberations Tuesday night and Keeling is expected to outline the opinion of the school board. Mrs. Holladay is to outline the duties of each committee.

She said she will point out to the committee members that the school district has a projected enrollment of about 3434 students this fall, while the district had about 3215 students last spring.

"School officials realize our facilities are going to be taxed to the limit and they'd like the committees to look at the number of students, teachers, and the facilities for extra-curricular activities and the possibilities for a building and expansion program and the possibilities for funding of that expansion," she said. "We want to avoid telling them we have to have new schools. We want them to look at what we have and help us by letting us know what the citizen committees would suggest."

Mrs. Holladay said the committees are "definitely work committees" and were not formed purely to rubber stamp the tentative conclusion already reached by the school board.

"It's not just a matter of form that we're asking the committees to serve," she said. "There's work to be done and what they've been asked to do is not a foregone conclusion."

Board members have been discussing the school crowding problem for about two years and have hired an architectural firm to design tentative plans for a new elementary school and a new high school.

They have also been told by Jacobs that probable cost of a bond issue for new construction could be in the $5 million range. Board members have not discussed to any great extent the possible location of schools.

According to the charges to the advisory committees already compiled by the district staff, the committees will apparently be expected to study the two issues and then make formal recommendations for solutions to their study problems.

Amarilloans are first in county to face welfare fraud charges

Two Amarilloans have become the first persons in Randall County history to be charged with welfare fraud.

Dist. Atty. Randall Sherrod said charges alleging fraudulent receipt of food stamps and other welfare payments have been filed against Philip Dean of 5118 Bonham in Amarillo, and Sharon Flemings of the Foxfire Apartments in Amarillo.

He said to his knowledge no other welfare fraud cases have ever been filed in the county heretofore.

Neither Dean nor Miss Flemings have yet been arraigned. Dean is charged with unlawfully obtaining assistance and services from the Texas Department of Public Welfare by giving a false statement to welfare workers about his employment status.

Sherrod said he is charged with allegedly telling welfare workers he was unemployed while he was actually employed and the false statement resulted in his receiving about $225 to which he was n-entitled. He said Miss Flemings is charged with making a false statement to welfare officials concerning the amount of rent she was paying and the false statement resulted in her receiving about $300 in aid for dependent children, food stamps and medical assistance to which she was not entitled.

Sherrod said a state welfare investigator preferred the charges against Dean and Miss Flemings.

He said he anticipates the investigator's work in the Amarillo-Canyon area may result in further arrests for welfare fraud.

Several cases have already been filed in Potter County alleging welfare fraud.

Sherrod said the charges are misdemeanor offenses and carry as penalty a fine of no more than $100 or prison sentence from six months to two years.

Rent houses unavailable here; students wait for dorm rooms

The start of the fall term at West Texas State University is three weeks away and already housing in Canyon for students, faculty or other newcomers is virtually unavailable.

Local realtors report they have been deluged with calls from folks looking for rental housing in the city.

University dormitory officials report the women's residence halls are already full and the rooms in the men's halls are filling fast.

"We have more people looking for rentals than we've ever had since I've been in business," Jim Christopher of Christopher Real Estate said.

Christopher said to his knowledge there is no rental property available in the city and that most apartment houses are already booked for the fall semester.

"We always have an influx of people here in the summer, but nothing like this," he said. "We have a tremendous number of young people coming in."

Mrs. Dorothy Hawkins of Carefree Realtors confirmed that she's been approached, too, for help in finding rental housing for families.

She said she feels the peak of the demand has not yet hit.

"The problem is a lot of people are not giving up places like they have in the past realizing there's a shortage," she said.

Bill Davis of the Davis Agency said he's had about 100 calls for rental property in the last week.

Roland Black, manager of the Chamber of Commerce and head of the chamber's housing referral service, said the city simply does not have the rental housing available to meet the demand.

"Most apartments are full for the fall term," he explained.

He said rental houses in the two- or three-bedroom size are simply not available at all.

Weldon Trice, dean of men at the university, said he has about 150 rooms yet to be filled by advance reservations for the men's residence halls on campus.

As of Aug. 1, he said, about 800 men's reservations had been received.

A spokesman in the dean of women's office reported that all women's residence halls are filled for the fall. The dormitories have a capacity of about 1700.

She said there is a waiting list for reservations at this time.

Trice said some women students will be housed in Stafford Hall, which in the past has been a men's residence hall.

While the pressure is on local realtors to find rental property for newcomers, they say they are also being deluged with requests for homes to buy here.

Christopher said newcomers seeking homes here are from throughout the country and are coming to Canyon for a variety of reasons — to attend college, to work at the college, to work in Amarillo, and so on.

He said the home availability for purchase is better by far than the availability of rental homes.

Black confirmed that many young families are eyeing homes in the city for purchase.

The prospect for federal funding for apartments or housing rental subsidies for students or the elderly or those in the lower economic brackets brightened last week but not by much.

County Judge Woody Pond met Thursday with Leon Boone, planner for the City of Amarillo, and Tom Plumlee of the City of Canyon to discuss applying for grant money from the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development for rent subsidy funds.

Boone was not optimistic that the funding which might be (See RENT, Page 8)

Parolee gets most bond set by Pond

County Judge Woody Pond set the highest bond he's ever set on a misdemeanor case Thursday for Joe Dale Holleman, a parolee from the Texas prison system only two months, who has been charged with simple assault.

Pond set bond for Holleman at $50,000. "I don't believe I've ever set one that high since I've been in office," Pond said following the hearing.

Holleman was charged earlier Thursday with the assault of a woman in a parking lot at the Sport Spot on the Canyon Expressway in Amarillo.

Dist. Atty. Randall Sherrod said a 22-year-old woman told officers she had left the popular Amarillo nightclub during the early morning hours Thursday and got into her car.

She told them a man jumped in the back seat of the car and instructed her to take him to his home, Sherrod said.

When the woman refused, he said, the man jumped from the back seat and grabbed her hair through an open car window and pulled her from the car through the window by the hair.

Holleman, according to the Randall County Sheriff's office, was found guilty of homicide in 1972 in a Potter County court. He had been charged with the death of his girl friend, who had been pushed from a moving vehicle on Amarillo Blvd. East.

The Potter County jury assessed Holleman a five-year sentence and records in the sheriff's office indicate he was released from the Texas Department of Corrections on parole on June 3, 1975.

City billed $226,000 for county taxes

City Manager Glen Metcalf almost choked on his morning coffee Thursday when he found in his mail a tax notice indicating the city will be charged taxes on $226,000 in taxable property this fall by Randall County.

But, later in the day, Admin. Asst. Tom Plumlee assured Metcalf it had all been a mistake.

Metcalf received one of the notices all Randall County taxpayers should be receiving this week telling them their taxes will rise several dollars for the coming year. The notices, sent out by County Clerk LeRoy Hutson, were compiled by computer.

The notice sent the city placed a taxable value — not 100 per cent value — on a small house the city owns just west of the community center at $226,000. That would make the house worth about $1 million on 100 per cent value.

County tax office officials told Plumlee their computer had erred in sending the tax statement.

They explained there is no taxable property within the city of Canyon which would have a taxable value of $226,000, and that the small city-owned house is labeled exempt from taxation on the county tax books.

More than expected $338,000 to WT for fire repair

Gov. Dolph Briscoe has allocated $338,000 to West Texas State University to repair damage caused by fire to the old administration building on campus.

Charles Travis, Briscoe's budget director, informed WTSU officials of the allocation Friday.

The basement portion of the university structure was heavily damaged by a fire June 23, a fire which destroyed the university's telephone system.

University officials had been expecting an emergency allocation from the governor of about $225,000.

Dr. Lloyd Watkins, president of the university, said Friday he was delighted with the allocation and that repairs on the building will begin as soon as bids can be awarded for the work.

State Sen. Max Sherman, who worked with Briscoe for the allocation, said he, too, was extremely pleased with the funding. Sherman indicated the allocation is probably the largest single emergency allocation ever made by a governor of Texas for such a purpose.

Financial Vice President Herman Miller said bids for reworking the old administration building are to be opened Aug. 21 and a special committee of university regents is to okay the awarding of bids with the action to be confirmed in September by the full board. The funds must be committed for the project, under state law, or they lapse and become unavailable after Aug. 31.

Miller said the bids issued by his office call for a base bid price for renovation of those parts of the building directly damaged by the June fire and repainting the first and second floors of the structure.

Alternates in the bidding will call for prices on painting the third and fourth floors of the building, for extensive remodeling of the building's electrical system, for the addition of fire escapes, for renovation of the stand-pipe fire extinguisher system, and for extensive remodeling of two large classroom areas on the top floors of the building.

A sprinkler system for fire safety in the building will not be in the bids or the alternates, Miller said.

He said he will recommend that if bid prices are initially too high to allow for reconstruction of large classroom areas on the top floors of the building then the university either finance the reconstruction itself or close the classrooms to student use.

Miller said he hopes work on the building can be completed so the building will be available for classroom use the spring term.

He said faculty members will have access to their offices during the fall term.

Family camping here tells story of 'wild man' attack to officers

Barney Giles, his wife and their five children were just sitting down for some late supper Wednesday night in their camper in Palo Duro Canyon State Park.

Mrs. Giles had a skillet of fried potatoes still cooking on the camper stove and the family was chatting.

When, suddenly, from out of nowhere came a 6-foot man sporting long hair and wearing only faded blue jeans.

And, without knocking, he stormed into the camping trailer, breaking out windows as he went. As he rushed toward the Giles family, he picked up their portable television set and hoisted it out the trailer door and onto the red dirt outside. Out went other utensils and even the skillet of cooking potatoes.

When his tirade was all over, Mrs. Giles had a sore jaw, Mr. Giles had a cut chin and one of the Giles children had a cut arm.

That's the story the Giles family told Randall County Sheriff Cliff Longest and several of his deputies just before midnight Wednesday as they scurried around their trailer to prepare to leave the park.

Longest said his men responded to a call to the Juniper camping area of the state park about 10 p.m. Wednesday and upon arrival found a good quantity of blood on the ground, hurting Giles family members, a bashed up trailer, but no sign of the burly chap who was supposed to have caused all the damage.

Longest said the Giles told of being surprised by the man, who made several tours of the camping trailer, breaking windows as he went, bashing Mrs. Giles and scuffling with other members of the Giles family.

Two older boys told officers they chased the attacker but lost him in the many foot trails in the state park.

After the boys returned to the campsite, Longest said, the man returned again, broke several more windows and then took off into the mesquite and cactus again with Giles' boys on his tail.

Deputy Harold Hooks said when he arrived at the campsite he found a large pool of blood outside the trailer, blood which might have been dripped there after the assailant cut his hands on the window Fork of the Red River and into the large cottonwood grove camping area.

But, there the blood stopped and there was no further sign of the alleged assailant.

City asked to submit request for HUD funds

The red tape has apparently finally been unwound and the City of Canyon has been invited to submit a formal application for $22,000 in grant funds for a street paving project in West Canyon.

Admin. Asst. Tom Plumlee said he was notified last week that the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development has asked Canyon to apply for the funding, which because of a mathematical mistake the city was unable to receive last spring.

The grant amount is about $9000 less than city officials had originally anticipated when informed of the HUD program in November 1974.

"It has been emphasized by HUD that this is an invitation to apply and in no way obligates them to approve or fund Canyon's full application," Plumlee said in a written statement.

He said HUD has suggested the full amount of the grant be $22,000 and that it be used for (See CITY, Page 8)

School hair codes typical court topic

The legality of public school dress codes — particularly those regulating the length of boy students' hair — has been tested in dozens of court cases since the late 1960s when such codes became as fashionable as longer hair styles. Summaries of federal court decisions indicate the court responses to codes which set established lengths for boys' hair have been as varied as attempts at regulation. Federal circuit courts in every region of the country have spoken to the desire of local school districts to enforce dress regulations which impose standards for hair appearance and the decisions have followed two main forms, both relating to the constitutionality of dress codes. The school dress code adopted last week for another year by the Canyon School Board for enforcement throughout the system appears to be similar in many respects to the codes which have been challenged throughout the country. In some federal circuit court cases, the court has found the regulation of length of hair unconstitutional. In others, the court has found no constitutional basis for a challenge of dress codes. In a Wisconsin case, for example, a circuit court found that school board regulation on length of hair was unconstitutional where the board failed to show that longer hair distracted fellow students and failed to show any other possible justification for regulation. In a Missouri case, another circuit court found that a student possessed a constitutionally protected right to govern his personal appearance while attending public high school, and although such personal freedom was not absolute, regulation relating to hair style was invalid where school administrators failed to demonstrate the necessity of regulation in order to carry out the educational mission of the school. A federal district court found in a Pennsylvania case that neither evidence that enforcement of hair length rules was beneficial as an instrument for enforcing the entire disciplinary system nor the fact that parents generally approved the enforcement of such a code was sufficient to show that boys' hair regulation was necessary to prevent disruption in the educational process, so that regulation was invalid because it infringed upon the liberty of students without due process. Another Pennsylvania district court found in a similar case that the wearing of long hair by students in public school is "liberty" within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment (of the U. S. Constitution) so that school hair regulation must bear a reasonable relationship to the educational function and regulation which was not justified by disruption or other interference with the educational process in the public school was invalid. In a most recent case, a federal court found that a rule requiring boys' hair to be kept off the ears and collar was outside the statutory authority of the school board to promulgate and enforce since school officials failed to come forward with factual bases for the opinion that there was a connection between the length of hair and quality of education. On the other hand, many federal court decisions say regulation of hair length is up to the schools and is not a question of constitutionality. An Ohio court of appeals found that a hair length provision did not deprive a student of any constitutional rights and was not unreasonable, arbitrary or capricious, and there was a reasonable relationship between rule and maintenance of discipline, promotion of safety in certain courses, and the furtherance of valid educational purposes, including the teaching of grooming, discipline and etiquette. In a Texas case, a federal court held that there is no constitutionally protected right to wear one's hair in public high school in length and style that suits the wearer, so high school hair regulations are valid under the Constitution except where such regulation has an arbitrary effect. In a Tennessee case, a court held that regulation concerning hair length was valid where it had a reasonable connection with the operation of an educational system and tended to help maintain school discipline, with evidence showing that long hair tended to disrupt the classroom atmosphere. Some federal courts have declined to become involved in the question. In a Kentucky case, a court of appeals said the length of a student's hair does not raise a substantial federal question. The Canyon dress code establishes a hair length standard for male students and says the purpose of the code is "to assist in maintaining an educational climate in which teaching and learning can take place free of disruption of any kind including distracting forms of dress and/or grooming; to establish guidelines which provide students with set boundaries in dress and grooming during an era when fads and styles have veered extremely from the established norm; to ensure a continuance of a favorable school image via appearance of its students at school and at interscholastic activities." As the court cases cited indicate, the judiciary has recognized a standard with which to determine whether a school district's hair rules are constitutional or unconstitutional. The standard involves the question whether the school officials can actually show that long or unusual hair is disruptive to the learning process. Where the courts have found school districts to be capricious in the enforcement of hair standards, the standards have fallen. Ever since the advent of the Canyon school district dress code, school (See SCHOOL, Page 8)

School board hair code rationale not rational

By CARROLL WILSON
The usually rational Canyon School Board is afflicted about this time annually with a remarkable malady which causes them momentarily to lose all contact with reality. Their annual decision to regulate the length of boy students' hair in the schools comes from the gut not from the head and is direct result of a creeping old fogeyism which hits the board members in the stomach every time they talk about school dress codes. The rejection last Tuesday of a liberalized hair length code for male students in favor of the obsolete code in effect last year, a code which stipulates that boys' hair cannot touch the collar or come below the middle of the ear is gut-level decision-making at its worst. Somewhere in his stomach (no doubt he could give the location an accurate physiological nomenclature since he's a physician), Dr. Dudley Moore feels it's his duty to ensure that all the boys in Canyon are virile, athletic, short-haired 1950s-style gentlemen.

Only a viscerally-oriented logic would hold that in 1975 the length of one's hair is directly related to one's performance in the classroom or on the football field. The Canyon School Board has built a highly questionable rationale for continued strict enforcement of the hair length code. The rationale — as outlined by the board members themselves — goes this way:
1. Schools must have discipline to operate effectively.
2. Discipline is had when a standard established by the board is enforced.
3. The reasonableness of a standard is gauged on the near-derthal level — if the standard is reviled and generally detested, it must be a good one.
4. The relationship between a standard and good discipline is directly proportional to the amount of ill will the standard creates.
5. Discipline is a school function, much as the military views it as a command function. It cannot come within but must be established from without the individual.

While no one would argue that discipline of some variety is necessary in the effective operation of a school classroom or school district, it is not altogether clear that the discipline must be of the coercive genre. School board members would be hard pressed, for example, to prove to a reasonable observer that long hair on boys is more disruptive to discipline in the classroom than are girls. Given the nature of the animal, it's probably a safe conjecture that the primary reason high school boys are in high school is because of high school girls. Is it reasonable, then, for the sake of discipline to construct two high schools — one for boys and one for girls? Windows in classrooms are also disruptive things. Daydreaming is a past-time undoubtedly indulged in by high school students as they peer out doors through classroom windows. Is it reasonable, then, to construct a new high school without windows? But, this all assumes that long hair is disruptive to discipline in the first place. The burden of proof — that is, factual proof — would be, in a court of law, on the school board to show that long hair has actually proven to be a disruptive force in the classroom. I strongly suspect that given the opportunity to come up with actual examples of classroom disruption due to long hair school board members would fail. Hair is simply not a big deal in 1975. It is not a matter of concern in society as a whole. Nor is it a matter of great concern in Canyon. It is a great concern to school board members only. Nor is long hair an indicator of aberrant behavior. The chances are good that were the hair code done away with, hair lengths would not vary considerably given the current style of hair purveyed by media personalities and those who are not in the high school environment. The chances are also good that were the hair code done away with those students who tended toward more aberrant behavior or exhibitionism would grow their hair long to satisfy their inner need or desire. But, the chances are also good that with the strict hair code now enforced those students who tend toward aberrant or exhibitionist behavior have found a more disruptive outlet. If tight discipline, then, is the goal of the school board its accomplishment is not affected by the strict hair code. A strict hair code is misplaced attempt of discipline.

The kind of discipline which school board members should be concerned with has nothing to do with learning and learning experiences. Obviously, the school board recognizes this. Because last Tuesday night, the same night they adopted the coercion-enforced hair code, they adopted a new policy rewarding students for good attendance. It is more than passing strange that on two virtually parallel policy issues, the board opted in the one (hair length) for negative reinforcement of behavior and in the other (student attendance) opted for positive reinforcement of behavior. Perhaps it would be more appropriate for the school board to offer those students who will agree to shave their heads bald for the coming quarter the promise that they will not have to take quarter final exams. At least the coercive flavor of the hair code could be obliterated by such positive reinforcement. The hair code enacted by the school board Tuesday is insidious for reasons other than that it has no relationship to the kind of discipline with which the school system should be concerned. As Board Member Ed Wieck pointed out, it turns high-priced administrators and teachers into watchdogs. Many teachers consider the hair code a hair coat they must don, not because they believe there is a relationship between hair length and classroom performance, but because the standard is arbitrarily handed down by the school board. Should school administrators and teachers spend their valuable time enforcing a highly questionable physical standard for the sake of some ephemeral disciplinary value mandated by balding and short-haired aging men? Or should they spend their time concentrating on the most important function of educating our children? In an era of increasing personal freedoms, should the school board be at all involved in the regulation of the physical conditions of students, or should they be more interested in the mental conditions of students? The stand taken Tuesday night is diametrically opposed to the stand Dr. Moore takes when given the opportunity — that parents need to become more involved in the education of their young. A strong case can be made that the physical appearance of a child is exclusively domain of the parent, a domain in which the school board should have no business.

By ANN BROWN
Americans have many genuine causes for concern: inflation, recession, unemployment, excessive taxation, foreign relations, racial tensions, crime, drug addiction, etc. The drug addicts that pose the greatest problem, however, are not the hippies and muggers skulking in dark alleys, but the drunken national policy makers in Washington, D.C. The D. C. has come to denote the "Drunken Capital" of the world. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare reports some 9 million alcoholics in America, or approximately one out of every ten who drink. A survey made by the American Business Men's Research Foundation of Lansing, Michigan, revealed, however, that 1 out of every 5 adults in Washington, D.C., is an alcoholic. Of the regular drinkers in Washington, some 19 percent of those above age 14 are classified as heavy drinkers. In other states it averages 12 percent. A survey by the Resource Planning Corporation revealed the District of Columbia has nearly 50 percent more heavy drinkers than 20 states where a similar survey was made. In an investigation of the drinking habits in Washington, the RPC discovered that the heaviest drinking was in Northwest Washington where the most powerful men in government live. Rutgers University Center for Alcohol Studies reported that the District of Columbia averages selling 6.54 gallons of liquor per person. The average is 2 to 3 gallons in other states. J. William Terwilliger, director of consulting services at the Washington Hospital Counseling Services, admits there is more drinking in Washington than any other place in our Country. "It's a custom in government and diplomatic affairs, and in many cases it's expected," he said. "You'd have the biggest lead balloon in Washington if you threw a party and didn't serve wine, liquor, and champagne." In 1970 the government's General Accounting Office estimated there were between 112,000 and 224,000 alcoholic federal employees who were costing the taxpayers between $275 and $550 million a year. And it grows worse each year. Drinking has become so acceptable that the Wilbur Mills debacle scarcely caused a ripple. A national magazine reported some puzzling statistics from the D. C. budget this year: Sales tax on liquor was cut from 6 to 4 percent — to boost sales. The same budget allocated $5 million for the treatment and prevention of alcoholism, an increase of $700,000. Does that make sense? Drunkenness is definitely destroying the character of our national government. In the August issue of Reader's Digest, Dr. Charles S. Lieber, professor of medicine at Mount Sinai School of Medicine, reports from extensive research that any amount of alcohol is detrimental, and even a moderate drinker suffers extensive damage to the liver, heart, and brain. The drunken debauchery that ruined ancient Rome, the most powerful civilization on record, was nothing compared to the alcoholism in our nation's capital. Probably not a single American would employ a drunk to handle his personal money or keep his private books, nor would it likely be tolerated on a county basis. Yet electing them to high state and national positions costs us more money, and is far more detrimental to our welfare. But as long as we vote for alcoholics, say nothing about their drunken behavior, and give alcohol privileged status over other dangerous drugs, we can expect our lovely land to end in the same sad state liquor brings to an individual's life. Contrary to general public opinion, alcohol is not a stimulant but a depressant. Don't Americans have enough national pressures (not to mention personal ones) to depress them without buying more depression in a bottle? If every taxpayer would write his congressmen, and ask them if the cost-of-living raise they recently voted themselves was needed to pay for their liquor, it might help in more ways than one.

As oldtimers remember him, John W. Turner was one of the more colorful personalities of the early Umbarger days. John was born Sept. 26, 1861 to Harry and Martha Turner in Muscatine, Iowa, lived for a few years in Kansas and the "Indian Territory," and in 1887 was hired on as a cowhand and cook with the T-Anchor outfit in Canyon. When Randall County was organized in July 1889, John became the first Justice of the Peace, a job he held for over 45 years. A deep tragedy befell him in 1895 when his young wife and children Walter Lee and Minnie Ola passed away only a few days apart. Life was never again the same for him and not being able to forget the scene of grief, he left Canyon in 1908 for the lonely prairie around Umbarger where he lived as a bachelor until his death. Besides being Justice of the Peace, John Turner was quite a versatile man. One observer reported that he owned one of the best truck farms in the country and that he was an excellent carpenter and cabinet maker. Others knew him as an excellent cook when he was a cow-hand at the T-Anchor ranch. At yearly reunions of cowboys Judge Turner could be found stirring the ladle, making his famous specialty, the "son-of-a-gun" stew to the delight of everyone present. But it was another activity that brought him his greatest "fame." To his dismay, some eager people in Canyon had voted the county dry in July 1900, and John liked a drink once in a while. What else to do but to make your own whiskey. Shortly after he had moved to Umbarger, Judge Turner bought the old home of S. G. Umbarger and moved it to his place where the Sylvester Batenhorst family now lives. Eventually it wound up being a chicken coop which saw a lot of "moon-shining."

It was not until after World War I that Texas enforced the liquor laws, and the skirmishes John had with the law have lent themselves to rather tall tales. One day, as Bill Money recollected, John Turner came into town carrying a gallon jug of whiskey. At that time, no one really cared if someone "moon-shined" since many were involved and no one wanted "to throw the first stone." It so happened that John met the sheriff who jokingly asked him: "Hey, Judge, what've you been bottling?" In his excitement and trying to get rid of the evidence, old Turner dropped the bottle (in front of the T. S. Stevenson, Sr. house). He was fined $5.00 for breakage of glass on a public street. Another time, John Bedenk met him in Canyon, where he had just bought new fittings for his still. He didn't mind explaining at length "what it was for" and people around them could hear the whole story. So it was bound to happen that Federal agents during the Prohibition period got wind of him but it took them a long time to pin something on John. One day, pretending not to know him, they approached the Judge on the street and asked him innocently where they could find Judge Turner "because they had to take him in." It sure scared old John and denying knowing that "Judge," he excitedly cranked his old car to get away. It wouldn't start and the smiling agents gave him a push and sent him merrily on his way. Neighbors and friends bought a lot of whiskey from John Turner because he made "good stuff," but he never was around during the transactions, at least that's the way it looked. There on the window sill of the old chicken coop were the bottles and next to it a cup where you were supposed to drop in the money. And you'd better pay up, for he was lurking from somewhere with a gun watching that he didn't get cheated. When raids were planned by the "feds," he usually got wind of it in time and quickly buried the equipment. Once, however, he was in a desperate situation and hurriedly hid the still in the Umbarger cemetery. This more than anything else got him in the "pen." As Bill Money reported: "My grandfather was on the jury that sent him to the penitentiary in 1923. They trusted Old Judge Turner, though, and without an escort he climbed into his Ford and drove to the prison himself. In fact, he arrived there too early and since the prison authorities didn't have his papers yet, they had to put him up in a hotel and foot his bill." Others tell the story that he even made whiskey for the warden who returned the favor by making John judge of the inmates. Anyhow, people in Randall County liked old Judge Turner and while he was in the penitentiary, they re-elected him for his Justice of the Peace. For many years thereafter, he was known in the community as the "peace-maker" rather than a punishing Judge. They laid him to rest on March 27, 1937 and Randall County lost one of its illustrious citizens who made history during his time.

Zoning Commission To Meet

The city's Planning and Zoning Commission will meet at 7 p.m. Monday at the community center to hold a public hearing on two requests for rezoning of property.

"Rhyme Of The Ancient Water Heater"

Water, water everywhere
And not a drop to drink;
And none to bathe and none to wash.
There's something wrong, I think.
Our ancient water heater,
It burst at 3a.m.
The signs of strain and stress,
I never thought to check for them.
So first thing in the morning
I'll remove this albatross.
An electric water heater
Will alleviate my loss!

Nuptial Vows Exchanged By Miss Ruthart-Jackson

Trinity Baptist Church in Amarillo was the setting for the nuptial ceremony which united Miss Joni Lynn Ruthart and Cary Dwayne Jackson in marriage Saturday evening, August 9.

Rev. James Bond officiated at the double ring ceremonies uniting the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J.D. Ruthart of 5300 Winslow, Amarillo with the son of Mr. and Mrs. E.P. Jackson of 3206 Mockingbird, Amarillo. The bride is the granddaughter of Mrs. L.C. Ruthart of Canyon.

Candelabras and greenery framed the altar for the wedding ceremony and the aisles were marked with hurricane lamps and satin bows. Prenuptial music and wedding marches were presented by Mrs. Lynn McGee, organist, with Brent Scott and Cary Walker as soloists. Candelighters were the bride's cousins, Trena Ruthart and Scott Ruthart.

Mrs. Brent Scott, a sister of the bride, was matron of honor and bridesmaids were Janice Ruthart and Brenda Ruthart, both sisters of the bride, along with Barbara Carter of Dallas and Suann Lloyd of Hartford, Connecticut. They wore floor length gowns of baby blue dotted swiss trimmed with white embroidered lace and had white wide brimmed hats with open crowns with cascading blue ribbon streamers. They carried nosegay arrangements of white daisies, baby's breath and blue satin ribbons.

Toni Jackson, a brother of the bridegroom, served as best man and groomsmen included Jim Hrcir, David Spivey, Mark Love and Marty Thomas. Ushering were Greg Ruthart, Greg Brown and Brad Passons.

Gini Jackson, a cousin of the bridegroom, served as flowergirl and Paul Jackson, a cousin of the bridegroom, was the ringbearer.

Presented in marriage by her father, the bride wore an empire styled wedding gown designed and made by her mother of miramist and crepe. The re-embroidered French lace bodice featured a scalloped neckline and long full sleeves with matching lace edged cuffs. The gathered skirt was swept into a chapel train edged with a ruffle. She wore a chapel length veil of bridal illusion edged with matching lace held by a satin bow as she carried a bouquet of white roses, daisies and baby's breath atop a white Bible with white satin streamers.

The newlyweds and wedding guests were entertained at a reception following in fellowship hall where Shirley Hartwell presented background music at the piano. Guests were registered by Debbie Spivey, sister of the bridegroom.

A white lace cloth highlighted with blue bows decorated the bride's table which held the tiered wedding cake accented with blue wedding bells on the top tier. The bridegroom's table was laid with a dark blue cloth under cream lace and accented with a hurricane candle and blue floral arrangement.

Serving at the reception were Phyllis Hill, Tonya Fyfe, Erin Sasser, Paula Hampton, sister of the bridegroom, and Leslie Ruthart, cousin of the bride.

As the couple departed on a wedding trip to Colorado Springs, Colorado, the bride wore a blue and white gingham dress with white accessories.

Both the bride and bridegroom are graduates of Tascosa High School in Amarillo. He is presently attending Amarillo College and employed by Medi-Park Pharmacy while the bride is employed as a dental assistant with Drs. Shackelford, Barron and

Canning Lid Shortage Hits At Wrong Time

The shortage of proper canning lids has spread across the nation — and it is now time for the abundant summer gardening projects to be ready for canning.

The situation is serious to local homemakers, as well as those in other areas, who have already spent innumerable hours of hard work and expense in getting their gardens to the point of production.

Family budgets were expected to be lightened by the onslaught of garden produce for fall and winter tables — but looks like many of these gardener's efforts will "waste in the field" unless the homemaker has an alternate route (such as a freezer) for preserving the crop.

and lily of the valley. The stand-up collar featured a banding of lace and the long fitted sleeves featured a dainty border of lace at the wrist. The A-line skirt front had fullness swept to the side and back and was completely bordered at the hemline with streamers of lace and lace daisy medallions. Her cathedral veil of imported illusion was attached to a band of lace and bordered with daisy lace edging. The bridal bouquet was carried on a white Bible.

A reception for the couple was held following the marriage ceremony with Mrs. Robert Caraway and Mrs. Ricky Summar serving at the table. The couple departed for a trip to Ruidoso, New Mexico with the bride attired in a pale blue street-length knit suit complemented with white accessories.

After August 9, the couple will establish their home at Rt. 1 Sunray where the bridegroom is employed with his father at C and W Farms. The bride is a 1974 graduate of Canyon High School and the bridegroom attends Dumas High School.

street paving as proposed by the city last spring.

Local officials began preparing an application for the federal funds last November, but HUD announced in early spring that funding would not be available due to a mathematical error. Congress passed an amended law providing funding for cities like Canyon who, due to the error, were left without access to the funds.

As originally proposed, Canyon would have received $31,000 for the first year program and about $600,000 in subsequent years for various urban development projects.

But, Plumlee said under the present HUD set-up, the city is eligible for funding a year at a time, and applications for each year's funding must be approved separately.

In order to comply with the HUD guidelines for the funding, city commissioners must hold another public hearing on the grant application. Plumlee said the public hearing date will be set at the commission's Aug. 18 meeting.

The deadline for filing the formal application, he said, is Sept. 30.

available — about $24,000 — could aid in any way the plight of students here who are looking for housing.

The funding for this year, he noted, is primarily for paying rental subsidies to families in existing structures.

Even so, he said, it is doubtful students could qualify for the subsidy program.

Plumlee was to talk with other city officials to determine the feasibility of the city's housing authority administering the subsidy program for about 20 units.

No decision was reached during the informal meeting Thursday.

officials and school board members have worked from a tacit assumption only that hair length might have deleterious effect on the school environment, but they have witnessed no such disruption and factual evidence of such disruption is negligible.

If judicial procedure demands that the test of the hair standard be its actual relationship to an actual — not perceived or wished-for — improvement of school environment, should the community expect less than that the school board cite in concrete examples its reasoning outside the realm of arbitrariness for steadfastly adhering to the school hair code?

Longest said his men talked to other campers in the area, none of whom had heard or seen anything unusual.

"We shook down all the camp areas and campsites, and came up with nothing," he said.

Longest said the family described the man as being about 6 feet tall and between 30 and 35 years of age. He had longish hair, they said, and was wearing only blue jeans.

Deputies also notified area hospitals to be on the look-out for such a man, but no reports had been made from the hospitals as of Friday.

Longest said the deputies were still searching the areas in the park when Giles and his wife and three of the children headed into Canyon to spend the remainder of the night. Two sons remained at the campsite, he said.

Hooks said the Giles told him they were from Arkansas and had been living in their trailer in the canyons with Giles working at odd jobs in Amarillo to support them.

The Kitchen Sink

By SUSAN WILSON

The past five and a half years — ever since the birth of our oldest — seem to have been if not a continuous argument at least a period of no little heated discussion around our house.

The reason — both Hubby and I have different ideas about how to raise a child. Everything about raising children seems, at least in our household and in the child-rearing section of the book store, to be controversial.

Cloth diapers or disposables? When to start solid foods? Bassinet or baby bed?

You'll get different opinions from everyone you talk to. Hubby thinks one thing and I think another.

Like our fight over oral gratification.

I consider thumb-sucking a repulsive, disgusting habit. Hubby, on the other hand, finds thumb-sucking cute. He thinks pacifiers are dirty, artificial and revolting. We never discussed thumb-sucking until I bought D'Arcy a pacifier and encouraged her to poke that in her mouth rather than her thumb. She did indeed enjoy a pacifier and for 18 months we didn't go anywhere without one. I had my way, thinking how easy it all would be.

Rebecca doesn't like pacifiers, no matter how much I encourage her. She seems to prefer her thumb. It seems Hubby is going to get his way this time.

Julie didn't like a pacifier or her thumb. She chose instead to suck on a particular corner of a particular blanket which she will not let me wash. Hubby and I find this a dirty, artificial, repulsive and disgusting habit, but it makes her happy and what's a little happiness?

One of our major arguments came when we discovered ourselves nodding off to sleep on the couch at 1 a.m. while D'Arcy bounced off the walls still awake and going strong.

"Should we allow her to cry herself to sleep?" I yawned one night after a week without sleep. "Baby's cry for a reason," Hubby responded. "See if you can't figure out what's wrong."

"An 11-month-old child who is not sick, not hungry and not wet is crying because she's tired at one in the morning," I said. "If we'd leave her alone she would go to sleep out of sheer boredom if nothing else."

I won and the next night we cheerfully set D'Arcy in her bed just as we were hitting the sack, determined to allow her to cry it out.

Cry she did. We closed her door, closed our door, crammed cotton in our ears, covered our heads with pillows, gnashed our teeth and waited.

"What kind of person could sleep with that tiny innocent thing wailing away, forgotten and abandoned in a big dark room?" my husband asked as he emerged from under his pillow.

She cried only 15 minutes before she went to sleep but we didn't sleep for two weeks because of guilt pangs.

When to call the doctor can cause family turmoil, too. In every parental duo there is at least one who likes to check with the doctor about everything. In our family it's me.

I have called the doctor about mosquito bites, how close to clip toenails, slight tummy aches, runny noses and on and on.

While we were in the Army, D'Arcy developed some horrible disease which manifested itself on her scalp. She'd spend her waking hours scratching at her ears and head and I knew they weren't mosquito bites but something rare and probably incurable.

Army physicians never heard of Hippocrates, are surly, grumpy and must pass a test before they can practice in government hospitals.

"What's the trouble?" snapped the surliest and grumpiest of the bunch as he approached my afflicted child.

My physicians never heard of Hippocrates, are surly, grumpy and must pass a test before they can practice in government hospitals.

"What's the trouble?" snapped the surliest and grumpiest of the bunch as he approached my afflicted child.

"My baby has this horrible, itchy stuff on her head," I said trembling.

The doctor adjusted his spectacles, flicked his moustache and looked me straight in the eye.

"Wow," he said, and for a moment I thought I detected a human quality to his voice. "You're right, Mrs. Wilson, this is terrible. Your baby has the worst case of dandruff I've ever seen. Sure glad you brought her into the emergency room where we don't have any other problems."

I not only worry when something is wrong. I worry when something is right.

"Should she be crawling so soon?" I asked Hubby one night. "Won't it hurt her legs? I'd better call the doctor."

"Let the kid crawl for gosh-sakes," Hubby replied. "She's probably bananas from gazing at the ceiling all day for the last six months."

"If her legs are crooked and she can't walk, it'll be your fault," I cried, and rushed to the phone to plead with the doctor for advice. "Mrs. Wilson," he said in a tone strikingly similar to the emergency room Army doctor, "a baby crawls when ready. There is nothing you can do unless you would like to strap her down."

Parents argue a lot about toys. Should a boy have a doll? Should a girl have a dump truck? Hubby thinks kids should have anything that'll make them happy. I draw the line at toys they might swallow and animals that might swallow them.

Hubby, who refuses to read Spock because of his antiwar activities tends to rush the toy business. I sent him after a little red wagon for our 18-month-old and he returned with a tricycle.

D'Arcy couldn't reach the pedals so I spent one entire summer paddling a trike up and down the sidewalk with D'Arcy holding on behind. My legs have yet to recuperate. The knots on my shins look like displaced knee caps.

One winter he brought home what amounted to several hundred itty-bitsy wooden toys. For months I picked up itty-bitsy cars and houses off the floor. I found itty-bitsy trees in my bed, stepped on itty-bitsy animals in the middle of the night, found an itty-bitsy person in the sugar bowl, and an itty-bitsy garden gate in the talcum powder. One day in a fit of anger because I choked on an itty-bitsy chair with my morning tea, I got tired of feeling like a giant and I vacuumed the entire village, inhabitants and all. A person can take just so many itty-bitsies.

Our biggest fight occurred when I mentioned buying a playpen to put D'Arcy in at age five months.

"A playpen," Hubby yelled. "A cage you mean. Why progressive zoos don't even cage animals any more and here you want to put my sweet little daughter in one. How will she discover the world from inside one of those prisons. Will you let her out on Sundays so she can visit the family? How about a leash. She'll be walking soon, you know."

I got the impression Hubby wasn't going to be rational about playpens so I let it drop. After all, D'Arcy at the time was an only child and I had nothing better to do than chase her around, knocking bugs, grass, cigarette butts and pop-top tabs from her hands before she put them in her mouth.

But, when Julie was born I tried again. When I mentioned "playpen" I only got a very cold "what kind of mother are you?" stare. I decided Hubby was weakening.

When Rebecca came along I started again, but I decided to point out a few side benefits too. You can put your Christmas tree in a playpen and the kids won't be able to eat the ornaments.

Or, you can use a playpen as a depository for dirty clothes or D'Arcy's pictures.

A friend gave us a used playpen and Hubby relented. I think he realized that with D'Arcy running, Julie walking and Rebecca crawling, the device could offer me some deserved quiet time.

Yesterday I tried it out and it was wonderful. I set the playpen under a shade tree in the back yard and spread out a quilt on the ground. I gathered together the kids, a glass of tea and a book and we spent the morning outside. I shut the back gate, turned D'Arcy and Julie loose and put Rebecca on the quilt. Then I climbed into the playpen with my book and tea and spent a restful morning. Playpens are divine.

Imperial Savings Opens Local Office

Imperial Savings Association has announced the grand opening of a Canyon branch office on the square.

Ribbon-cutting ceremonies and other grand opening activities will be held from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Aug. 16.

The ribbon will be cut on the new facility by Imperial officers and local officials at 1 p.m.

"We're proud to be a part of this fine community and we want to do everything to meet the needs of our customers," Imperial President Tommy G. Lane said. Open house will continue at the new branch throughout the day Aug. 16.

In addition, 35 paintings by Ruth Elaine Maples, a recent masters degree graduate of West Texas State University, will be on display during the day and the following week. Miss Maples has studied under Dr. Emilio Caballero, Dr. Marion Galvin, John C. Pellew, Stefan Kramer and others.

Mrs. June Crooks, recently appointed as branch manager for the office here, will be on hand to greet guests during the day.

Mrs. Crooks came to Imperial after a seven-year stint in the accounting department and data processing department of the Texas Highway Department. Prior to that she was associated with an automobile firm in El Paso and also served as continuity director for an El Paso radio station.

Mrs. Crooks and her husband Bob live on a ranch northeast of Canyon. They have seven children.

Going somewhere? Or been? The Canyon News wants to know about it — and so do its readers.

WT Tracksters To Face Stiff Schedule

Quality, depth and potential are words West Texas State University track coach Bob Kitchens uses to describe his 1975-76 track team.

After putting together what Kitchens terms as "three pretty good years of recruiting," the tracksters will begin practice for the indoor season when school opens in the fall.

Kitchens labels both the indoor schedule and the outdoor season as one of the best WT track has seen.

The indoor season will get under way in January, but cross-country competition will begin Sept. 18 in Plainview at the Wayland Invitational. The WT tracksters will then make stops at Lubbock Christian College, Colorado State, Eastern New Mexico University, Texas Tech and their own WTSU Invitational. The distance runners will compete in the MVC championship cross-country meet to be held on a date not yet set in November.

After opening the indoor season Lubbock Christian College in January, the WT tracksters will host two dual meets with Texas Tech and Oklahoma State coming to Canyon.

On Feb. 14, the team will run in the U. S. Track and Field Federation Indoor Championship meet to be held in Columbia, Mo.

The outdoor season begins with a dual meet with ENMU at Portales, N.M. on March 6. Other meets on the outdoor schedule include the Arlington Relays, Texas Tech Relays and a quadrangular meet at Lubbock made up of WT, Baylor, Texas Tech and New Mexico State University.

The West Texas State Invitational will be run on April 17 and the Wayland Invitational is set for April 23. On May 1, the WT team will travel to Denton for a dual meet with North Texas State University.

Then, on May 21-22, the Buff runners will host the Missouri Valley Conference Outdoor Championships.

Out of the 22 team members, 21 are underclassmen. Marvin Self, last year's MVC discus champion, is the only senior on the team.

Along with Self, the team is made up of six freshman, eight sophomores and seven juniors.

According to Kitchens, the freshmen recruits will be filling gaps left from last year's graduation.

One such freshman is Eddie Johnson from Knox City who ran the 440-yard dash in 48.7. Johnson was third in the state last year in the quarter-mile.

Another freshman to look for will be Tommy Williams from Lubbock. Williams was a regional champ last year as a high jumper and finished fourth in the state meet. His best effort was 6-10.

Joseph Toney, a sophomore from Eldoret, Kenya, will be back on the Buff track team after setting several marks last year as a freshman. Toney holds school records in the indoor mile, indoor 880-yard run and cross-country. The distance runner was the MVC champion last year in the 880-yard run. "We expect him to be much better as a sophomore with added maturity and adjustment to longer periods of running," coach Kitchens said of the Kenyan runner.

Board Of Equalization Set

Randall County commissioners will meet as a board of equalization Monday afternoon to hear any complaints over tax values which might come from industrial or utility company officials.

The commissioners are to adjourn their court session at 2 p.m. to sit as the board of equalization.

Only about 50 businesses, primarily utilities and other major industrial accounts, have been notified officially of the Monday session.

More than 27,000 other notices of the recent action by commissioners to raise taxes here have been mailed to county taxpayers, but they have been notified to appear later in the month.

Commissioners voted in July to raise taxes from $1.05 per $100 on 17 per cent of valuation to 95 cents per $100 on 25 per cent valuation.

During their regular session, commissioners are expected to continue discussion on a hike in insurance rates for insurance for county employees. Commissioners were told at their last meeting that the rates are to rise by $7 per employee and $11 for each employee's dependents with the county picking up the tab for both. Commissioner Dee Griffin Sr. is to report his findings after studying the rate hike request.

Commissioner John Fulgenzi is scheduled to make a report on the condition of the present county courthouse annex on South Bowie in Amarillo. Commissioners discussed at their last meeting the possibility of selling the old annex since a new annex structure is under construction at the Canyon expressway and Georgia Street.

Commissioners will meet at 10 a.m. to pay county bills and hear a report from Mrs. Audrey Bruse, tax assessor-collector, on the tax roll.

Then, they will meet again at 1 p.m. for their regular meeting.
